The town of Chaumont-sur-Loire, once the site of Catherine de' Medici's hunting lodge, now has a hotel. The 39-room property evokes agrarian-chic living — some beds are reached by barn ladders and others are tucked into tiny huts, while larger rooms offer sweeping countryside views and spacious showers overlooking a garden. The restaurant continues the back-to-nature theme. Beneath a thatched dome, chef Guillaume Foucault whips up Loire-centric delights like eel cream tart, wild-mint brioche, and rustic pâté in a pool of oat cream topped with juicy pear. The only other amenities here are courtyard fire pits, but who needs a spa or lobby bar when there are birds in trees, bees on flowers, and horses whinnying in the nearby field? leboisdeschambres.fr; doubles from $203. —Betsy Andrews
